

The Power of Money:

Rudolf Steiner and a New Economic Paradigm

A Panel Presentation and Conversation with Arthur Edwards, Gary Lamb, and John Bloom

As an economist in the early part of the 20th century, Rudolf Steiner anticipated much of what is taking place now in our economy and provided ideas of how money can serve both the individual human spirit and the good of society as a whole. This panel discussion features three individuals who work extensively with Rudolf Steiner's economic ideas:

- Arthur Edwards, Co-Director, Centre for Associative Economics
- Gary Lamb, Co-Director, Hawthorne Valley Center for Social Research
- John Bloom, Director of Organizational Culture, RSF Social Finance

This panel presentation and conversation will explore some of Steiner's key indications on money and how they might be helpful in our personal and professional lives today.
